“Rejoice in the Lord always. I shall say it again, rejoice!” (Philippians 4:4)

With these words Saint Paul encourages us to be people who allow joy to touch our hearts and who spread joy through our lives of faith and goodness. Earlier this year Pope Francis said, “joy is the true mark of a Christian.” This joy is being filled with peace as we are certain that Jesus accompanies us. Knowing that the Lord is with us we have nothing to be worried and anxious about and the joy of God can shine in our hearts.

This Sunday the Church calls us to rejoice because the Lord is near. In the midst of our Advent waiting, we celebrate this Gaudete Sunday. Gaudete, a Latin word that means “rejoice,” is a reminder that we need not worry because the Lord does not abandon us. Instead, our hearts should be filled with joy as we wait for the Lord because he has come into the world as a man, he continues to come into our hearts to strengthen us, and he will come again so that all may be one with him.

How, then, do we share our joy in knowing the Lord? How do we allow our joy to be contagious and bring others to know the Lord is near? While a wide smile and a hearty laugh are a good start, joy is must also be expressed through an attitude of hope in our lives. In the midst of suffering and anxiety our joy is offered through encouragement and a hopeful word that God will provide for the needs of all. In the midst of fear and despair our joy is offered through our comforting presence and the hope that God always brings peace and comfort. In the midst of tears and sorrow our joy is offered through a listening ear and the hope that God will change our mourning into dancing by his care.

God calls us to be people of joy so that the peace, hope, and goodness that he has poured into our hearts can be shared so that those we encounter can know that God dwells with us and that he desires to dwell with them, too. May we rejoice in the Lord always and repeat the call to rejoice as we preach God’s word with our lives.

WHAT DID THE ANIMALS KNOW?
by Carole Clifford

Mary shifted her position and tried to get comfortable on the donkey. The animal was used to carrying much heavier loads, usually Joseph's tools and any materials needed to complete a job. Although Mary tried she could not find a truly comfortable position on his back and yet she was trying hard not to upset the beast of burden.

So far the journey had been difficult yet uneventful. The nights were brutally cold and last night Joseph had sacrificed his outer cloak to help keep Mary a little warmer.

Yesterday afternoon and again this morning the rain had been unrelenting. Perhaps tonight they would be fortunate enough to find a Jewish home where they could spend the night.

A sudden loud roar emanated from the forest, stopping them in their tracks. These forests were home to many wild animals, including lions and bears.

What could they do? Joseph quickly tried to form a plan of escape should one of the creatures appear and rush them.

It was hopeless. They were literally surrounded by woods on both sides.

Then there was the sound of not one but several animals. Emerging from the forest on either side of them a number of lions, bears and wild boar.

The animals stopped just at the edge of the path. Each animal sat or fell to its knees and stared at the journeying couple. They made not a sound, nor did they move a muscle as Joseph slowly resumed leading the donkey with its precious burden.
